Congress and Its Duty.

The two houses of Congress reassembled yesterday at the national capital under far more favorable auspices than for many years past. They came together to see the culmination of the great object of their political existence, the success of their policy of reconstruction. In the meeting of those members who for years have stood together in good and ill repute, who have fought the demon Rebellion and the giant Prejudice, and have conquered both, there is something peculiarly pleasing. They, like warrior-victors, recount the dangers they have passed and congratulate each other on the complete victory they have achieved. The matters which for six years past it has been their duty to discuss are now becoming insignificant. The question of reconstruction is almost out of the way. The success of General Grant, and the preservation of the large majority of the Republican party in each house, render the continuance of any line of policy they may see fit to agree upon a certainty for at least four years to come. Within as many months the whole system of reconstruction will be in complete working order, and the obstacles in the road, which have heretofore caused delay, be levelled down by the certainty of decision in the incoming Administration. The thoughts of the country and also of the Representatives can now be turned to other issues, and they can devote themselves to questions comparatively slighted in the unusual attention to the question of loyalty.

What is the duty of Congress to devote itself to, now that the issue of reconstruction is practically removed? We can answer negatively with more force. It is not its duty to continue to tinker and meddle with the body of reconstruction laws which it has established. So far as the policy of government in the Southern States is concerned, Congress has done all that it can in justice do to give perfect equality of rights to all men. It has passed laws quite stringent enough, and has given force to those laws by the establishment of governments which carry into execution their theory. These laws are sufficiently decided and sufficiently broad. With the accession of General Grant will come a proper execution of these laws, and it would be both useless and unwise to add to or correct them. They are good enough as they stand, and the people of the land have so declared. Therefore we favor the abandonment of reconstructive legislation, and with it all the various measures which the undue zeal of partisanship has led the authors to propose. Among these which should die the death is the measure declaring by statute the existence of universal suffrage in all the States. We deny its constitutionality and seriously doubt its policy. If an amendment to the Constitution is deemed proper by two-thirds, let it be proposed to the States; but as to decree who shall vote in Pennsylvania by a general law passed in Washington is an idea entirely too arbitrary to be candidly sustained. Such a measure would be the death-knell of the Republican party. We favor universal suffrage ourselves, and would cheerfully support it in any legal and politic way; but the Sumner bill is neither the one nor the other. We hope, therefore, that Congress will let all such measures rest in peace, and let the solution of the great problem all over the land be worked out by time and the gradual education of the popular mind, which must come with success in the practical workings of equal rights in the more Southern Commonwealths.

Having let reconstruction remain as it is, to what should Congress direct its attention? There are so many grave questions that have been necessarily slighted in the all-absorbing devotion to the issue of equal rights, that it will take time to select what first demands attention. Probably to the revenue system should be directed the earnest investigation of both houses. The present plan of raising internal revenue is so full of facilities through which rascality can be perpetrated, so abounding with means of swindling without detection, that it needs a thorough renovation. It would almost be easier to recommence on a new foundation than to continue to patch up the present one. Some decided steps should be taken to repress the frauds which now deprive the Government of so much which is its just due; and the above will occupy no small proportion of the time of Congress. Then, again, the issue of finance demands most thorough investigation: To a certain extent we have lost sight of this in the hurry and excitement of the last few months. Yet its overwhelming importance is generally appreciated, and it is to-day demanding careful and extended examination. It is time that some steps be taken to establish for our nation a decided financial policy, and this can only be done by a prolonged consideration of the whole subject. To this Congress should devote itself. Then, again, the tariff calls loudly for revision. Our home interests must be protected, and that adequately, and this can only be done through a just tariff on imports. The object of the tariff should be a double one—to raise revenue and to protect native industries; and the present schedule is not formed with any such intention. To these three great measures—the revenue, the finances, and the tariff—Congress could devote every moment of its time and do the nation most signal service. With these still pending, there is certainly no time for the discussion of extreme measures neither warranted by necessity, expediency, nor law.

The Uprising in France.

The continued political difficulties in France, coupled with the reported decline in the Emperor's health, furnish an inauspicious augury for the perpetuation of the Napoleonic dynasty. The heir apparent will evidently have great difficulty in acquiring and maintaining the position now held by his father, and his prospects are not much better than those of the exiled princes of the old line of French monarchs. It is by no means certain that Louis Napoleon will not be deposed by his discontented subjects. His constant efforts to maintain and extend his popularity have proved unsuccessful. Always hated by the sincere Republicans and the sincere Royalists, he has failed to endow the Empire with the glory which Frenchmen demand as a compensation for the surrender of liberty. While he taxes the resources of the people heavily, and maintains an immense standing army, he gratifies the national pride with no resplendent victories, and his tortuous policy has resulted in a mortifying failure to extend French influence in the New World, and in the destruction of French dominions in Europe. Helping to raise Italy to high rank as a continental power, Frenchmen contemplate with indignation the danger that their heroic efforts have aided rather to strengthen a probable antagonist than to create a formidable ally, and they are disgusted with the failure of the Emperor to prevent the formation of a new empire as powerful as France. To the loss of national prestige, and the continued pressure of the conscription and high taxes, are added constant and irritating persecutions of the press and unpopular new exhibitions of absolutism, and the time may soon come when the people will be ready to dare anything to secure a change of rulers.

The Situation in Spain.

The prospect of a speedy settlement of the difficulties in Spain, and the establishment of a permanent government of liberal ideas in place of the despotism of Isabella II, is not promising. The monarchical and republican parties are becoming more antagonistic every day, and the cable gives us rumors of demonstrations threatening the public peace in various places. In Cadix the republicans paraded with arms in their hands, and troops were called out to disperse the procession and prevent further demonstrations; while in Tarragona the republicans attacked and dispersed a meeting of monarchists. This sort of thing is the beginning of anarchy, and the only hope against a relapse into despotism is in the speedy establishment of a stable government, that will command the confidence of the people and be strong enough to put down agitators of all parties who seek to keep up a spirit of dissension. Unfortunately the prospects are not encouraging in this respect. The Provisional Junta seems satisfied to keep the management of affairs in its own hands, and it is rumored that they intend to postpone the general elections until the 15th of January and the meeting of the Constituent Cortes for a month later. In the present state of affairs every hour of delay is dangerous, and we are more than ever convinced not only that the Spanish people are not prepared for republicanism, but that the chances of their being granted an opportunity to try the experiment are exceedingly slim. They made clean work in the revolution, but they have not shown any skill in the difficult task of reconstruction, and we cannot but admit that the situation grows more unpromising every day.

The success of General Sheridan in his first grand assault upon the Cheyenne Indians will remove the apprehensions that the country was about to enter upon an Indian war that would prove a serious drain upon the national treasury. The present campaign is evidently instituted with the intention of accomplishing results briefly and economically, and it does not belong to the category of the contests which were waged mainly for the benefit of contractors, and which were characterized by their raids upon the revenues rather than by any disposition or ability to punish murderous red marauders or to keep the peace on the frontier.

Chromo-Lithographs.

The popularity of chromo-lithographs is, we think, a most promising sign, and we are confident that pictures in this style, attractive in color as well as design, and cheap enough to place them within the means of the poorest, will do more to cultivate a taste for art than any other means that could be devised. The large sale of chromo, too, while it necessarily puts upon the market many inferior works, at the same time encourages the best manufacturers to make improvements, and to rival each other in the excellence of the pictures issued from their establishments. Our American chromo-artists have improved much in a few years, and if they still fail to rival the best foreign works, they give promise of future excellence that entitles them to commendatory notice.

A very attractive little subject has just been issued by Colton, Zabin, & Roberts, No. 172 William street, New York. It is copied from a painting by G. E. Boettcher, of Düsseldorf, and is entitled "Attention, sir," representing a rosy-cheeked little fellow teaching a dog to go through with some tricks. We think that this picture will be popular, as it deserves to be "God's Acre," which we noticed a week or two ago, is a pathetic little picture of fine artistic quality. "The Unconscious Sleeper" and "Whittier's Barefoot Boy" are also pleasing subjects, which have already won their way to favor. Turner, Brothers & Co., No. 808 Chesnut street, successors to G. W. Picher, have those we have mentioned, and an infinite variety of other chromos of American and European manufacture, and those who wish to purchase can scarcely fail to find something in their large stock that will suit in price and subject.

The Chicago Times has been measuring the growth of that city during the past year, and finds that thirty-four miles of buildings have been erected, at a cost of $25,000,000, and twenty-five churches, costing $2,000,000.
